IE Discovery Dominates Socha-Gelbmann Electronic Discovery Survey

Only Provider Named “Top 10” in all Seven Stages of E-Discovery Activity

Austin, Texas (August 15, 2006)— IE Discovery, the leading provider of comprehensive Discovery Management solutions to the legal community, has been ranked a Top Ten Provider in all seven stages of electronic discovery, according to the prestigious 2006 Socha-Gelbmann Electronic Discovery Survey. IE Discovery is the only provider to have been named Top Ten in all seven categories: Identification, Preservation, Collection, Processing, Review, Analysis and Production.

“We are pleased that the industry has responded to us so well,” said Chris May, CEO of IE Discovery. “We have long believed that our clients are best served by a comprehensive discovery management approach and take pride in providing outstanding service across the board. The results of the survey reflect this commitment.”

The 4th Annual Socha-Gelbmann Electronic Discovery Survey (www.sochaconsulting.com/2006survey.htm) is the most highly respected and comprehensive report on the state of the industry. It examines electronic discovery by collecting data and/or interviewing 91 organizations that provide or consume electronic discovery services, including a cross-section of large law firms and large corporations. “The Socha-Gelbman Survey has quickly become an industry standard,” added Bill Detamore, Director of Business Development at IE Discovery. “We couldn’t be happier that such an independent and reliable source has rewarded us for our efforts to be a valued service provider—at all seven stages of the e-discovery process.”
